SPECIFICATIONS

PURPOSE

It is the intent of the City of Fairhope to acquire UNIFORM SHIRTS with the following minimum specifications.

DEFINITIONS

Placket: The placket is the area of the garment where one piece fastens to another. On a polo shirt, this is below the collar, where the shirt buttons.

Buttons: Women’s style polo shirts may have buttons, or instead, have a collar and a small v-neck. Men’s polo shirts will have buttons on the right side, typically two or three (hence, a “three-button placket”).

Cuff: The end of the sleeve is known as the cuff. Some polos have rib knit cuffs, while others have self-fabric cuffs. This specification is for rib knit cuffs.

Tape: In fabric terms, “tape” is a narrow, woven piece of fabric. The best polo shirts have a “fully taped neck.” This strip of fabric appears on the inside of the neck, helping to maintain the structure of the shirt, while making it more comfortable by covering the seam between the collar and the shirt. It also helps to absorb perspiration. There is often tape along the inner side vents as well, to help keep the shirt from coming un-tucked. This specification is for “fully taped necks.”
Side Seam: Some t-shirts are “body knit,” which means that they are knit as a tube, and do not require side seams. Side seams help give polo shirts a more fitted shape. This specification is for side seamed shirts.

Side vent: The side vents are at the bottom of the shirt. Usually they are taped along the hem, though sometimes they are double-needled stitched. On athletic shirts and performance shirts, there is usually a small piece of tape on the outside of the shirt at the top of the vent, which aids in keeping the shirt tucked in. This specification is for side vent shirts.

Extended Tail: You will notice that on many polo shirts, the back of the shirt is longer than the front of the shirt. This helps keep the shirt from coming un-tucked. This specification is for regular, extended tail shirts are allowed.

Hem: You will see the term “double needle stitched” used occasionally. This means that the hem is stitched with a double row of needles, and hence two rows of thread, running parallel to each other. A double needle stitched hem is less likely to unravel, and also give the shirt a more finished look. This specification is for “double needle stitched” shirts.

Color: The color is defined as Blue Generation, French Blue, or exact equal. The City’s goal is to maintain a single color for all items procured under this bid.

Sizes: The sizes for this bid will be grouped into three price categories --

- Category 1 is small, medium, large, XL
- Category 2 is 2XL and 3XL
- Category 3 is 4XL and above

Logo: The logo will be the official logo of the City of Fairhope, Al. Artwork for the logo will be supplied by the City of Fairhope. The logo will be embroidered on the left front, above pocket, or, if no pocket, same relative location. Colors to match City of Fairhope official logo colors. City to provide artwork for embroidery set-up. Artwork and the digitized embroidery design to remain the property of the City of Fairhope. Samples will be submitted to, and approved by the City of Fairhope, before production run.
